Library to take part in Festival of Ideas 2011

Plans are currently in progress for the public release of previously hidden documents from the British Foreign Office Archives, relating to the events of 1950s Kenya that came to be known as the 'Mau Mau Uprising.' The country achieved independence in 1963, but Britain’s actions during the rebellion remain controversial. Kenya’s independence struggle has figured in popular and literary culture since that time in fiction, film, and even hip hop, from Ngũgĩ wa Thiong'o’s Grain of Wheat to slogans on Kenyan public transport. A small Library exhibition in October 2011 will show how the Kikuyu anti-colonial activists fought against the colonial authorities and the British Army, as well as what Mau Mau has come to mean in the present. The exhibition will feature archival documents, non-fictional works, newspaper reports, novels, secondary literature and films to highlight current and continuing attitudes to the conflict both in Kenya and the UK. More details nearer the time.

New books from research at the Centre of African Studies

Published as part of the Ohio University Press Cambridge Centre of African Studies Series, Christianity and Public Culture in Africa arises from papers given at a conference organized as the culmination of the Centre’s 2007/08 Visiting Fellows Programme. The contributors demonstrate how the public significance of Christianity varies across time and place, exploring rural Africa and the continent’s major cities, colonial and missionary situations, and mass-mediated ideas and images in the twenty-first century.

Wapulumuka Oliver Mulwafu is Associate Professor of Environmental History and SADC-WaterNet Professorial Chair of Integrated Water Resources Management at Chancellor College, University of Malawi. He was also a Visiting Research Fellow at the Centre in 2009/10. Conservation Song is based on his research into the ways in which colonial relations have shaped meanings and conflicts over environmental control and management in Malawi.

Louise Pirouet Papers

Over the summer term we will begin work on cataloguing the donated papers of Dr Louise Pirouet, an important collection concerning human rights in East Africa. Dr Angus Creighton, a researcher who recently consulted the papers, writes: 'In the 1960s and early 1970s, Dr Pirouet conducted crucial research on the early history of Christianity, interviewing individuals involved in the establishment of the Anglican church in Uganda. She, together with colleagues at Makerere University, undertook an impressive programme of publishing their research findings. Copies of some of their publications have are no longer available in Ugandan libraries. For example, the Centre of African Studies Library now holds some volumes of The Occasional Research Papers of Makerere’s Department of Religious Studies which are no longer available in the Makerere University Library.' One of the aims of Dr. Creighton’s project is to work towards making copies available in Uganda again. Further details of his work can be found at http://www.martynmission.cam.ac.uk/pages/research-projects.php
